WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- A strong high pressure ridge will be over the region for the next few days with dry and seasonably hot conditions prevailing.

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

http://www.wrh.noaa.gov/sto/brief/wwa_bc_cal.php

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

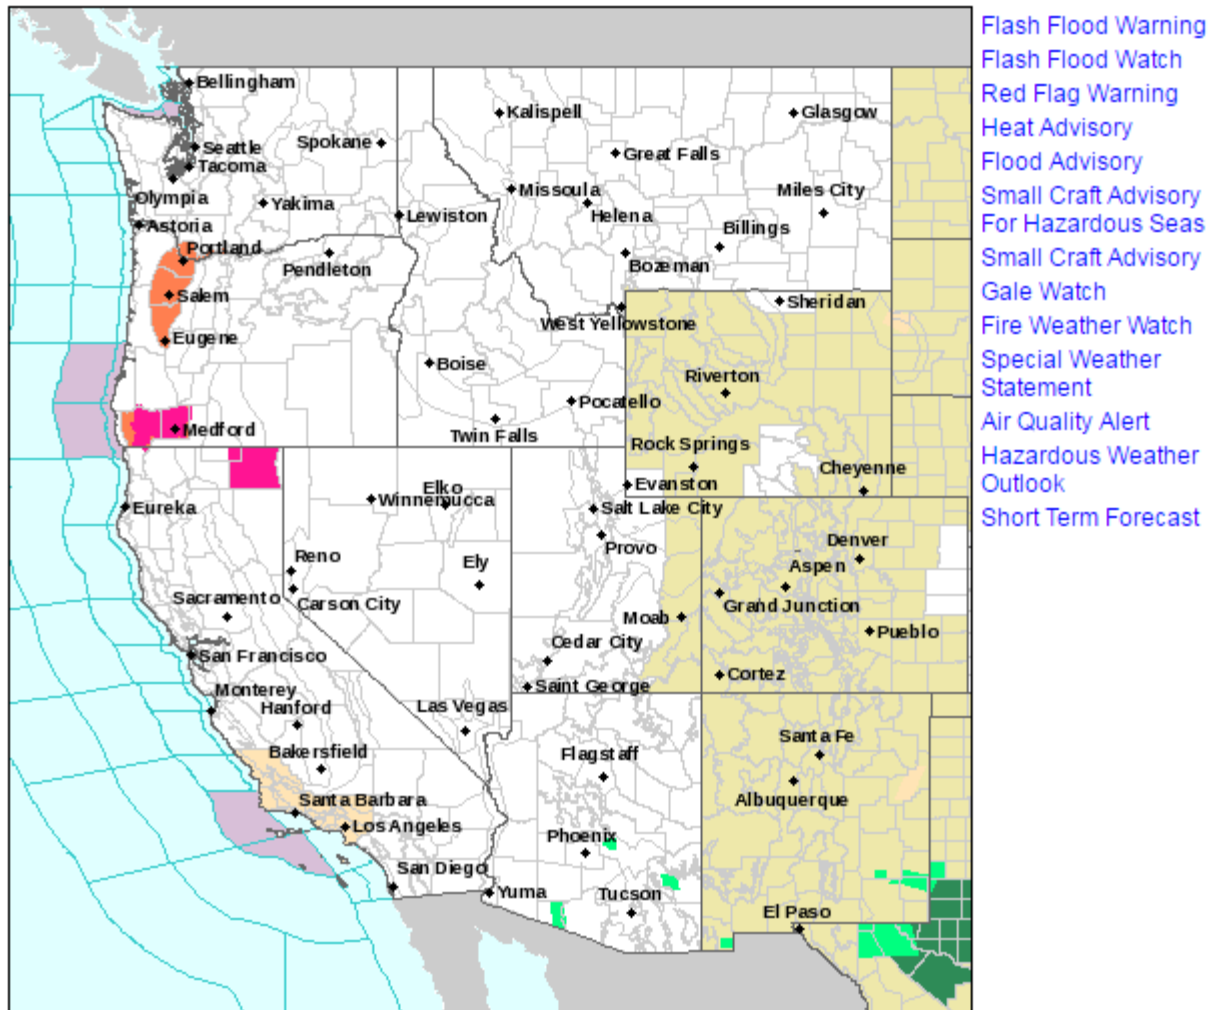

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A strong high pressure ridge will be over the region for the next few days with dry, very hot conditions prevailing. The marine layer will become somewhat thinner under the high pressure as well. Afternoon highs will be above normal away from the marine layer with the warmest inland valleys mostly 104-108 today and Saturday. Overnight relative humidity (RH) recovery with reach values of only 30-45% in most areas. Many drainage bottoms and marine layer influenced areas will be above 50%. Winds will be unseasonably light in most areas. Sunday a weak trough will move ashore and open the door for a change in weather pattern again. As the week progresses, a bit of the trough lingers over the region and may form into a weak low that could hang around just off shore. There will be very little moisture available, so any chances of isolated afternoon and evening mountain thunderstorms will be very small for any given location. Under this pattern, the smallest of thunderstorm chances would be confined to the far northern areas Sunday and Monday, then in the northern and eastern areas Tuesday and Wednesday. The end of next week is currently showing the most promising potential for isolated thunderstorms over more of our northern and eastern areas, and while any thunderstorms would most likely occur in the afternoons and evenings, there could be some overnight storms develop as well Thursday at least. Afternoon highs Sunday will generally be somewhat cooler than today and Saturday's under the incoming trough, but in general, highs will still be quite a bit above normal inland through at least the middle of next week. Wind speeds will pick up Sunday with the arrival of the trough and be seasonably breezy in the afternoons for a few days before probably becoming very light again by the end of next week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A minor amount of moisture in the low levels of the atmosphere will bring isolated showers and thunderstorms to the mountains and deserts of Southern California east and south of the I-15 Corridor this afternoon. Temperatures will warm a few degrees each day through this weekend as high pressure approaches the California Coast and moves inland. There will be little change in temperature early next week as the area of high pressure sits over the Desert Southwest. Maximum temperatures will be in the 80s to low 90s across the mountains with 90s to 102 in the valleys today. Minimum humidity will be mainly between 15% and 30% today and then drop into the single digits and teens away from the coast Saturday through early next week. A cooling trend along with an increase in humidity will occur Wednesday through the end of next week as a weak area of low pressure develops and spins off the Central California Coast. This low will draw monsoonal moisture into the area from the south and east bringing scattered showers and thunderstorms mainly to the mountains and deserts. However, some activity will most likely affect some coastal and valley areas as well. South to southwest afternoon winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph will surface across the mountain ridges and desert passes Monday through Wednesday.
